★★★★☆ Typical of current technology

April 6, 2003

Verified Purchase

This keyboard works about as well as any of the wireless keyboards I've used. As usual the pointing device works about as well as that of any laptop (pretty bad). It also sometimes misses, or doubles up on keystrokes. The internet keys across the top are a waste of time, mainly because the included software is pretty poor. It does not integrate well with Windows XP, and appears to have been written for a much earlier version. As usual, no Linux version of the software. Keep in mind though, I've tried many wireless keyboards in the past, and they are all pretty much like this one.

★★★★☆ Keys Unresponsive, would not respond to keystrokes...

Received this keyboard today and was very dissatisfied. I can't believe IBM actually allowed Micro Innovations to put their logo on this item. When typing, the keystrokes either were not recognized or would display seconds later. Receiver "data" light blinks showing that you are pressing keys, however, the keystrokes are not sent to the computer.

Returning item now as I type on a good/working LOGITECH wireless RF keyboard.

★★★★☆ Not the best alternative

April 9, 2003

This keyboard, also branded by IBM, is a very nice, compact size that fits very well in the lap. I did not suffer any dropped characters except when the batteries were dying. The downside of this keyboard is the mouse. It is unlike any I have used on laptops – neither the eraser type or the touchpad variety. It's more like a mini joystick that has a very slow response speed and not very good precision. I ended up getting a separate wireless mouse to supplement the keyboard mouse. Nice keyboard, lousy mouse.

★★★★☆ It works

September 11, 2010

One of the few keyboards that actually works. I have tried several different brands (X-Gene, Adesso, AURAVISION) and they were all absolute crap. They either had only 2 feet of range, misinterpreted characters typed or had loose screws that killed the keyboard within a few hours. The range on this keyboard was admirable and the keyboard worked. The only real complaint I had was the joystick-mouse was a bit funky, but still usable.

★★★★☆ Not up to par

April 12, 2003

Bought this keyboard after having previous experience with an RF Wireless Keyboard + Mouse from memorex. Was interested in a combo unit. The range of this unit is barely 8ft with many "blind" spots where the signal drops out. Very unlike the memorex unit. It's possible I just got a defective unit. But an online review from another person listed similar problems. Avoid. Hope someone can find something better.
